people will need long-term care in their lifetimes¹

The monthly median cost for a nursing home in the U.S. is

$8,669¹ each month | $104,028 each year

On average, people who require long-term care need services for

2 to 4 years²

Under certain conditions, Medicare will pay a portion of long-term expenses for the first 100 days. After day 100, long-term care expenses may need to be paid out of pocket each month!³

Financial Protection in More Ways Than One

Group Whole Life Complete provides protection in three different ways with one permanent life insurance product.

How it works

After enrollment, the death benefit may be accessed in one of three ways.

1. Traditional whole life insurance. The insured passes away and their designated beneficiary receives their death benefit as a lump-sum cash payment.

2. Long-term care services. The insured is certified chronically ill and receive long-term care, opting to draw funds from their death benefit to help pay for long-term care services.

3. Accumulated cash value. The insured encounters a financial emergency and need cash, opting to withdraw funds from their cash balance (or borrow against it).
